Dr. L. A. Roth of Spring Grove, York county, spent several hours here with friends last Friday.

Dr. C. A. Sheely, with his wife and little son of Harrisburg, were week end visitors in the homes of Bph. Sheely and A. J. Miller; they made the trip in his automobile.

H. P. Mark, our undertaker, has returned from a few days spent with relatives in Wilmington, Del.

George A. Gouker of near this place, now a musician on the U. S. S. Ohio, is spending a month with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Gouker, of Cumberland township. He is accompanied by his friend, Earl A. Telliga, a musician on the same ship. The young men recently returned from a trip to the West Indies and Panama.

Mrs. Worley Rudisill has returned to her home in this place after spending two weeks with her daughter, Mrs. John Irvin of Philadelphia.

Morris Gallagher of Washington, D. C., has returned to his home after spending some time in this place with Rev. E. Stockslager and family returned on Friday evening from a ten days' visit at McKeesport and Pittsburgh, Pa. Most of the time was spent at McKeesport, the Reverend's former pastorate. He served the people of Trinity Lutheran Church in that place for four years during which time the church was built and it was a great pleasure for him to preach again to those people last Sabbath evening. He was greeted with a full house. Among the places of interest that they visited were the Carnegie Library and Museum, Heinz's factory, Clark's large candy factory, and Highland Park. The Zoo was especially interesting. Pittsburgh has been well termed the Smoky City, but without it, it would be impossible to have the many iron industries that are located there which give employment to many thousands of people.

David B. Gouker met with a horrible accident on Monday. His left hand was caught in a circular saw and half of the hand cut off.

OVERLAND

Winter---The dullest season---was our most active shipping period

THE three deadest months, in the automobile business, are December, January and February. During this period some automobile factories shut down altogether.

With the Overland it has been the reverse. They have been shipping over 140 cars a day for the last six months.

Right now, they are delivering over $1,000,000.00 worth of Overlands every single week.

Their great factories can make no more than this. The demand forced them to manufacture as many cars in the dull season as they planned and prepared to do in the height of the best season---which is from April on.

The urgent demands for the 1913 Overland have broken and established new production records every day.

In 7 months they have shipped twenty-one thousand cars. This is just over 85 per cent. more than they delivered up to this time last year.

Every section, state and town in the country is ordering in excess of its contract---and it is utterly impossible for them to supply the cars.

This completely equipped, self-starting, 30 horsepower, five passenger touring car for $985 is the equal of any $1200 car built. It has the power, the speed, the seating capacity, the construction, the comforts and conveniences.

No car is made better. Being built in the largest, most completely equipped and most modernly appointed factory in the industry, you get in this car the same manufacturing methods used by the makers of the very highest priced cars. The methods of production are just as thorough, just as painstaking and just as exacting. The materials and cars are subject to the same rigid inspections and tests as the highest priced cars made.

Judge the value by the demand—and you'll always save money. They are now over 7000 cars behind their "immediate shipping orders" and it is still the flatter part of the dull automobile season.

Figuring from the present pressure for Overlands, it is difficult to calculate what the demand will be when the spring season comes. It is safe to assume that they will be swamped. They advise quick action if you want an Overland. Delay will not only mean a longer wait for your new Overland, but possibly you will be unable to get one at any price.

Enter your order now, and you may get your Overland when you want it. We candidly advise you to see the Overland dealer without delay. And as a final suggestion—take one more look at the above figures.

SOME LEGISLATIVE DOINGS

REPUBLICAN AND BULL MOOSE
AGAINST REFORM BILLSEconomy Bills Defeated by Machine—Lavishness with People's Money.

The unanimous vote of the Democratic membership of the House saved the Flynn party enrollment bill from defeat when it was up for final passage Tuesday noon. Strangely enough, many of the so-called Independents and Washington Party members voted against this measure, designed to correct conditions against which they have loudly protested in the past. The vote was 132 for the bill to 48 against it.

The measure, prepared by the Commission to Revise the Election Laws of the Commonwealth and introduced by Representative Flynn of Elk County, a member of the Commission, provides that each voter must make known his party affiliation when registering. The bill if it becomes a law will prevent the voters of any party calling for party ballots other than their own at primary elections. It is aimed at the practice of party riding long in vogue in Philadelphia and many other parts of the Commonwealth, and is in the interest of reform and clean elections. The position taken by a portion of the so-called Independents against the measure is incomprehensible and casts doubt upon the sincerity of their protestations.

Though the bill was introduced Feb. 25, and plenty of time has therefore been available for its consideration and amendment if it has any grave defects, the opponents of the measure Monday evening sought its postponement and recommitment to the elections committee. Failing in this, a final effort was made Tuesday to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed third reading Monday night, the motion to reconsider being made by Mr. Rockwell of Hoga County. This effort met the same fate as the previous ones and the bill went through after speeches in its favor by Representative Flynn and Humes, Democrats, and John R. K. Scott, insurgent Republican of Philadelphia. Mr. Scott was one of the Independents and Washington Party men who supported the bill after failing in the effort to recommit it. Charges of insincerity on the part of the opposition to the bill were made by its sponsor, Mr. Flynn, and were not challenged. The opponents of the measure seemed to be devoid of any plausible reason for their course.

Lavish with Peepsies' Money.

One swallow does not make a summer, nor does the defeat of one State policy salary grab bill make out a case of legislative economy, in view of the fact that numerous other measures designed to provide fat places at the public crib for machine henchmen have gone through the House, others are in prospect, and several bills tending toward economy in expenditures have been killed.

The first of the bills to put into effect the recommendation of the dual office holding investigation committee was killed by a vote of 81 ayes to 78 noes, lacking 23 of a constitutional majority. This was the measure of Representative Geiser, Democrat of Northampton Co., to abolish the salaries of $500 each paid to the State Commissioner of Health and the State Superintendent of Public Instructions as members of the Board of Medical Education and Licensure. This, in spite of the statement by Democratic Floor Leader Humes that Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, the present State Health Commissioner, had himself declared against receiving the extra $500, saying that the work was in line of his duties and that the extra money was an insult to an official drawing a regular salary to give his time and energies to the State. Tuesday the House voted to raise salaries of the Commissioner of Fisheries from $3,000 to $4,000, Chief Clerk from $1,200 to $1,500 and department stenographers from $550 to $1,200.

On the same day the Humes Bill providing that all fees received by any State employe for the use or sale of statistics, reports, documents or information coming to him in his official capacity must be turned into the State treasury was also defeated. The Humes Bill was prompted by the discovery that a Capital Hill official receiving a salary of $3,500 a year from the State was making about as much again as "his money" through the sale of statistics and information gathered by his department at public expense. The verdict of the House, as rendered in the defeat of the Humes Bill to stop such practices, is to the effect that it is entirely legitimate for State employes to sell the records of their department and pocket the proceeds.

With such evidence of dulled moral senses when matters involving public funds are concerned, constantly recurring, the present Legislature will have much to answer for the people. To the credit of the Democratic members of the House it may be truthfully said that they have, as a party, consistently stood for economy and against the various raids on the State treasury, but without the support of other parties they have been powerless to check the mania for office creating and salary raising that has characterized this session no less than some others.

New Rabies Law.

Following is the text of an act just passed relating to the treatment of persons bitten by mad animals, at public expense:

To provide for necessary medical attention to indigent persons who may be assumed to be in danger of suffering from hydrophobia or rabies, after having been bitten by any animal believed to be suffering therefrom; repealing all prior acts relating hereto; and providing for the payment of expenses for such treatment heretofore incurred in good faith.

Section 1. Be it enacted, etc., That in every county of this Commonwealth it shall be the duty of the officers or directors who are charged by law with the relief and maintenance of the poor and indigent of the county, or of any of the lesser poor districts therein embraced, to provide with approved medical care and proper attendance (including the so-called Pasteur treatment, where prescribed), all indigent persons, domiciled within said districts, who may be assumed to be in danger of suffering from hydrophobia or rabies, by reason of having been bitten by any animal believed to have been suffering from said disease; and to order payment of the expenses, so incurred, out of the fund provided by law for the support and relief of the needy and indigent of such county, or lesser poor districts, if still prevailing therein.

Section 2. All earlier acts providing, out of the public funds, for the care of persons assumed to be in danger from hydrophobia or rabies, are hereby repealed: Provided, That in all cases where induced by earlier acts, the officers or directors charged as aforesaid have already incurred the expenses of such care or attendance, or both, on account of indigent persons domiciled within their respective districts, and bitten by any animal then believed to have been suffering as aforesaid, their orders for payment of such expenses out of the funds provided as aforesaid, if incurred in good faith, shall be approved and paid by the public officers upon whom these duties are imposed by law.

Approved the 22nd day of April, A. D., 1913.

JOHN K. TENER.

Longer Rural School Term.

"We ought to have nine months of free schooling for every child in the rural districts," says Dr. P. P. Claxton, United States commissioner of education. In a letter to the superintendents of public instruction in the various states Dr. Claxton calls attention to the present short rural term and makes an earnest plea for a campaign by the state officers to bring the school term for county schools up to that for city schools. Many of the state superintendents have already pledged their assistance in a nationwide movement to bring this about.

Dr. Claxton points out how far we are in this country from approximating at present even the lowest minimum he names—a school term of 160 days. The average length of the rural school term is only 133 days, or a little less than seven months, while for the cities it is 184 days, or more than nine months. Only two states, Connecticut and Rhode Island, have school terms exceeding nine months in rural districts. There are 11 which have country school terms of between eight and nine months. They are California, Iowa, Michigan, Maryland, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, South Dakota, Washington and Wisconsin.

Many states are considerably below the seven months' average. In a number of them the country schools keep open for only six months. Florida and Arkansas keep their schools in rural districts open for five months, while North Carolina, South Carolina and New Mexico have apparently been providing their country children with barely 4 1/2 months of schooling every year.

Nearly all the city schools, the commissioner shows, already have nine months' terms, 180 days or more, with well-trained teachers, and there is no reason, he declares, why the country children should not have as many days of schooling and as good teachers as boys and girls in the city. Dr. Claxton asks a minimum school term for the rural districts of eight or nine months, a minimum qualification for rural teachers, of four years of high school and not less than two years of college or normal school education, and good libraries for all rural schools. "With these," he says, "should go an effort to adjust the work of the rural schools more closely to the needs of country life."

A number of the states with short rural terms are making efforts to bring the country schools up to the standard of their city schools, in length of term and other essentials. Dr. Claxton declared that all the states will be aided by a concerted movement for better rural schools throughout the nation.

"The Unforgiving Offender."

The above is the title of John Reed Scott's new book issued last week by the J. B. Lippincott Company, the one written from beginning to end in his blood-stained residence, Gettysburg, in last Saturday's Philadelphia "Record" appeared the following highly appreciative review of this latest work of Mr. Scott:

The average story dealing with the fractured ninth commandment is either an animal story or a book upon which a hypocritical world may hang a platitude. John Reed Scott in "The Unforgiving Offender" has shaken off the ghastly cloth of tradition and comes forth into the open to hazard a novel in which a woman who errs recovers her lost place among women who are good women merely, not appointed saints. The charming sinner who faces a stern eye than her God's, that of woman, does so gallantly. No cowering, no "forgive me, dear leaders, please, and I'll never, no never, sin so again" for Mrs. Harry Lorrain; per contra, dressed in a dream, splendidly motored, crest held high, she drives up to the Country Club, of which she had but a year ago been an immensely popular member, at an hour when society was assembled to show what society was in the morning.

If you can, gentle reader, the popping eyes and the suspended glasses. If you can't take in the picture sympathetically you will have no joy in the story of this woman, whose nose tilts at an angle of 45 degrees, metaphorically, when the dowagers sniff, and whose errand heart goes out in a like degree to two chivalrous club men, who rush to greet her and treat her as of yore. Oh, it's great reading; a fine breezy, wholesome decision of a clever woman who refused to be damned eternally simply because she had made one beautiful fool of herself with a cad of the first-blige-water. How she stared down the snubbers and loved the loyalists makes the heart glad, and incidentally seems prophetic of the coming equality of the sexes in this matter of being forgiven for one sin of the indicated magnitude. That a woman should be given her chance to moral rehabilitation only thin-skipped skirted Puritans will deny and how far do they count? Such books as this one of Mr. Scott's do more good for the cause of woman than the most sulphurous preachments. Beside this story's moral side, the book is brimful of an atmosphere that is as bracing to jaded nerves as a day in the woods or the companionship of persons who exude the breadth of soul that comes to men and women who refuse to be light-laced into old-fashioned measurements of right and wrong.

Houses and Health.

Very often the complaint is made that houses are not built as well as they used to be constructed. People lament the fact that the life of a modern house is so short.

From the point of view of sanitation and convenience this should be a cause for rejoicing rather than sorrow. Old style houses are for the most part poorly arranged as to light and air. Facilities for bathing, vacuum cleaning and other modern means for healthful living are inadequate. It is true in many cases that, "As the house is, so will the inhabitants thereof be."

Therefore if you own an old style house, invest money in making it modern. If, on the other hand, you find it necessary to build, don't make the mistakes that the builders of a few years ago made. Put plenty of windows into the house. See that they are so arranged that cross ventilation can be obtained. So many houses that are being built now are patterned exactly after the old style buildings and have just as few windows. Be thankful that you have the opportunity to build a house now and that you do not have to live in one of an unsanitary, unhygienic type.

Therefore take advantage of all the things that science has discovered in the way of improving housing conditions and apply them in your new home. A healthy house means a healthy family.—Karl de Schweinitz, Executive Secretary, Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis.

The Elephant's Palate.

An elephant's palate is very delicate, and the animal is whimsical in selecting or rejecting morsels of food. A writer tells of an incident humorously illustrative of the whims of a tame elephant belonging to the police of Dhur-bri. This elephant was fed with rice and plantains. The stems of the plantains were split and cut into transverse sections two feet in length. Three-quarters of a pound of rice was placed within each tube of plantain stem. One day while the elephant was being fed some one offered it a small sweet biscuit. It was taken in the trunk and almost immediately thrown on the ground. The mahout, thinking that the elephant had behaved rudely, picked up the biscuit and inserted it in a parcel of rice within a plantain stem. This was placed in the beast's mouth and at the very first crunch it showed its disgust by refusing the whole mess. The small biscuit had disgusted the animal, and for several minutes it tried by its inserted trunk to rake out every atom from its tongue and throat.—Harper's Weekly.

How Japan Greeted the New Year.

In Japan the new year is welcomed with far more energy than in this country. Let a man's energy be ever so defective, he is expected to rise at 4 a. m. and don new clothes to meet the auspicious morning. Then, with his gala garments in due order, he worships the gods, performs obeisance to the spirits of his ancestors and pays homage to all relations older than himself. No ordinary viands are consumed at breakfast. The tea must be made from water drawn from the well as the first ray of the new year's sun strikes it. On every table figures a red lacquer tray covered with evergreen leaves and supporting a rice dumpling, a lobster, oranges, persimmons, chestnuts, dried sardines and herring roe, all these dishes possessing an allegorical signification. This meal is the start of the festivities which are continued for sixteen days, business being almost entirely suspended for the first week of the year.—Chicago News.

Six Hits With No Runs.

Baseball has some funny freaks, but none ever beat one which a writer recalls happened in a game in Indiana on May 30, 1890, when the Anderson club got three triplers, a double and two singles in one inning, and yet they didn't score. Ireland, the first batter, hit for a triple and tried to score on a short passed ball, but was tagged out. Wiswell, the next batter, hit for what looked like a home run, but was caught at the plate by a good return. Shumway, the next batter, tripled. The next batter, Derby, bunted, and while the third baseman was waiting for the ball to go foul the batter made second, thus giving him two bases. Faatz also bunted and was safe, as Shumway on third was held from scoring. This made five hits, and the sixth came when Fear hit a liner to right, the ball hitting Faatz on the way to second, thus retiring the side.

The Friends We Might Have Made.

The most pathetic phase of life is a realization of the friends that we never make. The friends that might have been made by just exerting ourselves a little more. Who ever contemplated the loss of friends that he might have made in just releasing a little of his self centered reserve? We appreciate the person who always greets us at meeting day after day. It is so easy, so simple, to spread the halo of happiness about us that we often overlook it and go through the world thinking that every smile and every good impulse we have is not worth while unless bartered away for something in exchange. There life loses its whole value. It is when it comes from within with a worthy motive that happiness is truly ours.—National Magazine.

MRS. JOHN A. SWOPE'S LIFE
TERMINATED BY PNEUMONIA

Former Resident of County Dies
Suddenly in Hanover from Heart Failure

Mrs. Mary Blanche Swope, widow of the late Dr. John A. Swope, died in Washington, D. C., on Wednesday of last week after a brief illness from pneumonia. She had spent six months of last year traveling in Europe and after her return in the fall had visited Gettysburg and was enjoying excellent health and the news of her death came as a shock to her many friends in Gettysburg. Mrs. Swope's maiden name was Miss Mary Blanche Mitchell and she was a native of Washington, Pa. She became the second wife of Dr. Swope in 1885 and resided in the Swope residence on York street until the removal of Dr. Swope to Washington, D. C., after his election to Congress. Dr. Swope died in December, 1910. The funeral was held on last Friday, the body being brought here and interment made in the Evergreen cemetery. She leaves three daughters, Mrs. David McKee, Mrs. Blanche Mirkic, and Miss Gertrude J. Swope of Washington, and two step daughters, Mrs. Margaret J. Swope and Mrs. H. M. Chapman of Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Mary Emma Hoffman, widow of the late John Hoffman, died at her home in Gettysburg on last Thursday morning at the advanced age of 92 years, 3 months and 6 days. The funeral was held on last Saturday morning, the body being taken to the home of the late John Hoffman in the Catholic cemetery. She is survived by two sons, John Hoffman of the firm of Hertz, Worth & Hoffman, and Philip Hoffman.

Wm. A. Young died very suddenly at his home in Hanover Sunday, May 7, from heart trouble, at the age of 72 years, 8 months and 11 days. On Sunday morning Mr. Young seemed to be in his usual good health, sitting in his home smoking a cigar. About half past ten he told his wife he did not feel well, and would go upstairs and lie down until dinner. At 11 o'clock Mrs. Young went upstairs to inform her husband that dinner was ready, when she found that he was dead. A physician was summoned, who, after an examination, stated that death was due to heart failure. He formerly resided in Littlestown, the family moving to Hanover 31 years ago. For a period of eleven years he served as janitor of one of the Hanover public school buildings. He is survived by a widow, whose maiden name was Louisa Springer, of Littlestown; one daughter, Mrs. John H. Barritz of Hanover, and two sons, Wm. S. Young of Hanover, and J. Milton Young of Glen Rock. He is also survived by three sisters, Mrs. Eli Bollinger of Union township, Mrs. Charles Althoff of Hanover and Miss Sallie Young of Harrisburg, and two brothers, John A. ## The Gettysburg Chautauqu.

The Chautauqu movement stands for recreation, culture and inspiration combined. And it aims to bring these to everybody. It makes its appeal to the support of the community on the thoroughly business basis of value received. No educational movement or institution anywhere furnishes a like course of instruction at such nominal tuition. But it is even this that presupposes the general support of the whole community.

The coming Chautauqu season will furnish exceptional attractions. The Florentine Band, Ben Lindsey, Well-known on the Wonders of Science, either one is quite worth the price of the season ticket. The impersonations, Ninth and Magic together with the cultural addresses conspire to make the program a genuine treat. The local management are greatly pleased with the program offered by the Pearson Company.

The local promoters of the Chautauqu movement are profoundly conscious of its value. They are justified in appealing to the community for local support. They are freely giving of their time and of the benefit of their experience to the development of the work. These men are being nobly supported by a splendid corps of women who volunteer their services in the cause.

Points to be considered. Adult season tickets cost two dollars. The season ticket, although untransferable, will admit one person to each session of the Chautauqu. That is to say, not more than one person will be admitted at the same time to the same session. Single admissions will aggregate five dollars or in other words the rate of admission without the season ticket is two and a half dollars per person when paid singly.

Children under fifteen years of age, their season ticket at half price, six dollars. A special attraction is offered on behalf of the children in the Junior Chautauqu which will hold its sessions each morning of the Chautauqu week. All children holding the season ticket will be admitted to the Junior Chautauqu free of charge. This will consist of talks to children, films through the woods and fields, games, etc., under the guidance and direction of experts in work among children. There isn't a child in town that can afford to miss these features. No wise parent will ignore it. The children chorus to be trained in the Summer School should likewise be a source of inspiration to the young people as they will give a performance on Tuesday evening. Children belonging to the Chorus will be admitted on Tuesday evening no matter whether they have Chautauqu tickets or not. Miss Krumme, our Summer School music teacher, is at present preparing a chorus with two thousand children.

Anti-Cigarette Bill.

Pennsylvania Legislature has passed a bill prohibiting the sale or gift of cigarettes or cigarette paper to a minor. If demand is made upon a minor who has cigarettes in his possession by an officer to tell from whom they were obtained, his refusal subjects minor to a fine and imprisonment. Parents should get busy with active steps to prevent the sale of this dope to their children, for the incessant use of cigarettes is doing nothing more than dooming himself to the injury of his body.

YEAR BOOK of Stark Bro's Nurseries & Orchards Co. MAILED TO YOU FREE

Just say on a Postal Card: "Send me a copy of Stark Year Book for 1913." When writing, also tell us how many trees, shrubs, vines, etc., you will probably plant this season.

This Year Book is more than a mere catalogue of Stark nursery products, it is a practical, easy to understand text book for the guidance of the man who plants trees. Our own experience of nearly 100 years, the reports of experiment stations and the opinions of planters from all sections are condensed and reproduced for the benefit of busy people. An encyclopedia of orchard information, containing full size color illustrations of gloriously tinted fruits and many photographic reproductions in black and white; also information on many subjects in which the orchardist is interested.

Hundreds of varieties of apples, pears, peach, plum, cherry, apricot, quince, grape and all small fruits are described; weaknesses of each variety are pointed out and good points are explained. We feel that planters should know both.

Those interested in growing fruits or flowers or shrubs or shade trees will find this book of inestimable value; totally different from the average nurseryman's publications. It is a book you will keep for reference, and one on which you can depend as being absolutely accurate. Write today for your copy.

Hannah Payne's Mulberry Tree

A Feud Between Two Friends

By CLARISSA MACKIE

It was a small tree, but it had a wide spread of branches, and when the large leaves were out they formed a dense shade that quite hid the view from Hannah Payne's windows as well as it deprived her left hand neighbor Abigail Hodson, of any glimpse of the village street.

Once several years before this story opens Abigail had crawled through the gap in the fence that divided the two houses and knocked at her friend's back door.

"Hannah," she said, with a note of complaint in her voice, "what do you think?"

"Well?" queried Hannah sharply, for she resented Abigail's complaining tone.

"When I got up this morning I noticed the mulberry tree had leaved out so I couldn't see a wite of the road. It makes it dreadful lonesome not to see anything at all."

"Well?" repeated Hannah.

"What are you going to do about it?" demanded Abigail, with asperity.

"Nothing," Hannah had said.

"I thought maybe you'd break off a long branch of it so's I could have a view."

"It cuts off my view, too," returned Hannah.

"I should think you'd want to see the street. You always set store by seeing the street," persisted the tactless Abigail.

"I've got enough work to do with out peaking at the street," said Hannah loftily.

That was the beginning of the bitterness between Hannah Payne and her friend Abigail Hodson. From a cold nod the breach widened until they did not speak at all, and then early one morning Abigail arose and replaced the three pickets that had been removed from the dividing fence. Hannah heard the sound of the hammer and came to the window, but she said nothing, only the stubborn look remained on her face.

Three years had passed, and the mulberry tree thrived mightily. It sent out broad green leaves that cast a deeper shade over Hannah's house and kept the sunshine from the rooms. She had to keep a keener watch over her books and clothing, for the little house seemed damp, and mold gathered quickly on different articles.

The fruit ripened on the tree, and the birds came and carried it off. During the season when the mulberries were ripe the birds came in flocks to feed upon them, but Abigail Hodson would have scorned to touch one of the ripe berries, although in the past she had been very fond of them.

On this particular summer morning it was very dull in Green lane, where the two women lived. Abigail had finished her housework at 9 o'clock and taken her sewing out to the front porch. She could see Hannah Payne rocking to and fro on the next porch, but neither woman could see beyond the low hanging branches of the mulberry tree.

All at once there was the sound of drum and fife and a distant murmur of voices from the street. Abigail recollected that a small circus was to parade that morning, and in the evening there was to be a performance in a tent on the village green. Abigail was a Baptist and did not dream of going to the circus, but Hannah Payne would go. Hannah was a Baptist as were her forefathers, but they all went to the circus.

It was rather lonely there on Abigail's porch. The honeysuckle vine screened it well, and there was a sign of life except the frenzied darting of a ruby throated hummingbird among the flower trumpets, the buzzing of bees and now the sound of approaching music.

If Abigail Hodson had not been so proud she would have tossed aside her sewing and hastened to the front porch from which point she might have looked down the lane and watched the circus parade go along the main street. But she did not stir. If she had Hannah Payne would know that Abigail was suffering inconvenience from the obscuring mulberry tree, and that would give Hannah Payne a chance to laugh at her one time friend, and that privilege and advantage Abigail Hodson would not permit.

Abigail Hodson snapped a needle and tossed the broken pieces into the grass. "I wish I could cut that tree down," she muttered, not knowing that the same unspoken wish was in Hannah's heart, not realizing that her anger against the tree was stimulated by the feud it had caused more than by the lost view of the village street.

"I wish I could cut the old tree down," repeated Abigail again and again, and with each repetition of the desire there grew upon her the conviction that the tree must be cut down or things would never be right for her in the world.

She sat out on the porch until sunset and then went in and prepared supper, but she did not eat any. After supper she went out and sat in the gathering gloom of the porch. She saw Hannah Payne go away dressed in a white gown, and she knew that Hannah was going to the circus. Abigail's bitterness increased. She yearned to go to the circus herself.

At last, when darkness settled over Green lane and the cricket orchestra was in full swing, Abigail arose with a determined air and walked around her house to the woodshed. There were no other houses in Green lane, and she had the quiet little place to herself. Deliberately she chose a hatchet from the several that were ranged along the wall and in the darkness tried its edge with her thumb. Satisfied, she went out into the lane and gained Hannah Payne's front yard.

Under the mulberry tree it was very dark, and Abigail knelt down and ran her fingers around the trunk until she found a place where she knew the bark was rough and scarred. A horse had nibbled the trunk when the tree had been a mere sapling.

Then, to the music of the circus band playing down on the green, Abigail Hodson snote the mulberry tree blow after blow on the rough scarred place. The hatchet was sharp, and her thin, wiry arms were strong, and the blade bit deep into the tree. A brisk north-west wind was blowing, and Abigail had barely reached the heart of the tree when a hard gust came. There was a splitting, crackling sound, and she had scarcely reached a place of safety before the mulberry tree crashed down, breaking the fence in its fall.

As if suddenly impressed by the gravity of the deed she had committed, Abigail Hodson stood for several moments as if stunned. Then with a frightened glance around her she picked up her skirts and scudded home again. No guilty murderer could have cleaned the telltale instrument more carefully than did Abigail her hatchet after the fall of the tree.

Then she hastily changed her dress, locked her house and ran down Green lane. Five minutes afterward she entered the circus tent. Yes, for the first time in her life Abigail Hodson went to a circus.

Hannah Payne saw her and nearly tumbled off her narrow seat. She crushed the bag of peanuts she had been consuming into her pocket and craned her neck to see where her erstwhile friend would sit. Abigail took a seat directly opposite Hannah Payne. All the people stared very hard when Abigail came into the tent, because they knew that her father and her grandfather had disapproved of circuses, and when the Hodsons disapproved of anything their stubbornness was quite as remarkable as that of the Paynes.

Abigail Hodson broke all precedents by entering the tent, and there was little doubt that her fellow church members would require an explanation. In the meantime she must enjoy it if she could, for never again would she have the inspiration, provocation, desperation—call it what you will—sufficient to sustain her during such a trying ordeal.

Such was her excitement concerning the mulberry tree that she did not enjoy the circus at all. The clowns appeared silly, the horses old and decrepit compared to the graceful animals depicted on the billboards; the lonely elephant looked muddy and ancient beyond all belief; the performing dogs were foolishly self conceited. This was Abigail's estimate of her first circus.

When it was over she crowded forward to make her escape from friends and acquaintances who might have seen her there and asked embarrassing questions. She was almost the first one to leave the tent, and she sped away down the street with feet that barely touched the ground. She made up her mind that Hannah would guess who had committed the deed, and she, Abigail, would not deny it. She would stoutly maintain that the tree was a nuisance—a public nuisance—and if Hannah Payne wanted to begin a suit against her she could have the papers served at any instant.

By this time Abigail had reached Green lane and was toiling up its steep incline. Ahead of her in the darkness she could see the darker bulk of the fallen tree, and as she reached it she hesitated. Behind her there came hurried footsteps—those of Hannah but Abigail was rooted to the spot. She could not move an inch, no matter what happened.

Hannah Payne's voice came in advance of her spare figure. "That you, Abigail Hodson?" she queried sharply.

"Yes," she said dully.

"What's the matter? I know something awful has happened; if there hadn't you wouldn't have been at the circus! What's the matter?" panted Hannah, approaching.

"You can get the sheriff!" moaned Abigail.

"What's the matter? What's that?" almost screamed Hannah Payne, pointing to the fallen tree.

"I cut down your mulberry tree. You better go get the sheriff," persisted Abigail faintly.

"Good Lord, Abby, I never was so thankful for anything in all my born days!" ejaculated Hannah Payne. "I would have done it myself only the Payne streak in me wouldn't give in. Good bedtime, I say, even if the table is broke. I was thinking I'd take you down, anyway, and the one between our houses. It would make one nice big yard and some more friends." Hannah was talking fast to hide her embarrassment and to get on.

"I shall be paid," half sobbed Abigail, and then she gently laid away on Hannah Payne's strong shoulder.

As Hannah Payne half led, half carried the unconscious form of her friend into the house she felt a return of the old masterful feeling that had marked all their association in the past. "I don't know what would become of you, Abigail Hodson, if I wasn't here to look out for you," she muttered happily, and then her lips brushed the cheek of her restored friend.

Cream Puff Cure.

A young woman teacher in a school in one of the poorer parts of the city was overcome by a sudden attack of illness the other day. She dismissed the class, telling the boys she felt too ill to continue, but hoped to be quite well by the next day. The teacher rested her head on her arms and sat at her desk a few minutes waiting for strength to start on the journey homeward. She was only dully conscious of what was going on about her and did not notice a group of the ragged youngsters gathered by the door in deep consultation.

In a little while she heard some one softly say, "Teacher," and looked up. It was the raggedest boy of the lot, and he was holding out a paper bag full of something.

"What is it, Jimmie?" she asked.

"Somethin' t' eat," replied Jimmie.

"But I'm not hungry."

"Yes, you are," insisted the ragged philanthropist, winking at her gravely. "Nobody's sick except when they're hungry. We took up a c'lection an' got these cream puffs fur youse. Eat 'em quick, ma'am, an' you'll feel better."—Philadelphia Star.

The Silence Wager.

Once a Brahman and his wife quarreled acutely over three koi fish. Each wanted to eat two and leave the third for the other. The husband argued that he had latched them from the bazaar, the wife that she had cooked them. Neither would give way. Then said the Brahman, "Let us go to bed and see who speaks first. Whichever of us does will have to take the one koi fish." This agreed, they lay down, supperless, and passed the night, the dawn, the morning, in utter silence. The neighbors, alarmed, went in to see if they were dead. They shook them and pulled them about. Still no sound. Then three of them made the funeral pyre, placed the Brahman upon it and applied the torch. Next they lifted up the Brahmani to lay her beside her husband. At that moment the flames reached the body of the Brahman. Unable to keep quiet any longer, he jumped up, crying, "Brahmani, I'll eat the one!" "Then I'll eat the other two," she promptly replied.—Bengali Household Tales.

Some Indian Precepts.

Ernest Thompson Seton's "The Book of Woodcraft and Indian Lore" contains the teachings of the Indian Chief Wabasha I., from which we quote the following:

"In the day of his strength no man is fat. Fat is food in a beast, but in a man it is disease and comes only of an evil life.

"No man will eat three times each sun if he would keep his body strong and his mind unclouded.

"Bathe every sun in cold water and one sun in seven enter the sweat lodge.

"When your time comes to die sing your death song and die pleasantly, not like the white men, whose hearts are ever filled with the fear of death, so when their time comes they weep and wail and pray for a little more time so they may live their lives over again in a different manner."

Almost Epigrammatic.

This overheard conversation appeals to the weary one as nearly epigrammatic. The young people on the seat ahead of us in the homeward bound car the other night talked it out so loud that we couldn't help hearing it and jotting down a few notes on it.

"So," said the girl, "he said he knew me when I was a little girl?"

"He didn't say anything of the sort," contradicted the man.

"You said he did."

"I didn't."

"Why, then what did you say?"

"I said he said he knew you when he was a boy."

That put such a wet blanket on the conversation that we were able to read our sporting extra uninterrupted for the next several blocks.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Bits From Shakespeare.

Users of everyday catchwords are constantly quoting that ubiquitous person Shakespeare. "Dead as a door-nail," "long and short of it," "getting even," "tag-rag," "birds of a feather," "that's flat," "mum," "scarecrow," "solid," "milkop," "loggerhead," "bag and baggage," "a mere song," "dancing attendance," "send him packing," "kill with kindness," "give and take," "an eyecore," "to boot" and "the man in the moon" are all his.

Impertinence.

"I was born on the 25th of February."

"Remarkable!"

"Yes. There are few men who have that distinction."

"Very true. Have you ever done anything else unusual?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Cynical.

The old fashioned woman who used to get up at 5 a. m. to celebrate wash day now has a daughter who has an awful time getting the stuff together in time to give it to the laundry driver when he calls at 2 p. m.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Talk of Money.

Reading the Riot Act.

What is commonly meant by "reading the riot act" is better known than the origin of the phrase. The historical riot act was passed by the British parliament in the reign of George I. in 1714. It enacted that felony is committed when twelve or more persons unlawfully, riotously and tumultuously assemble together to the disturbance of the public peace, so to continue together for an hour after being commanded to disperse by the sheriff or undersheriff or a justice or the mayor of the borough.

In the "reading" of the British riot act, which is a necessary preliminary to its being put into operation, it is not customary to recite the whole of the statute, which is rather a long one, but only the following proclamation, which it contains: "Our sovereign lord the king chargeth and commandeth all persons being assembled immediately to disperse themselves and peaceably to depart to their habitations or to their lawful business upon the pains contained in the act made in the first year of King George for preventing tumults and riotous assemblies. God save the king!"

Lincoln's Book Friends.

A few fine books, well known, like a few fine friends, are worth more than many mere acquaintances. The Bible, "Aesop's Fables," "Robinson Crusoe" and "Pilgrim's Progress" were Lincoln's real friends. He used to lie on the floor and laugh over the "Arabian Nights." When his stepmother saw that books meant a great deal more to him than they did to any of her own children she took "particular care," as she said, "not to disturb him till he got out of his own record." She honored his private bookcase between the log-saw and his bed, and the big fires he used to build to read by at night. She knew that he carried a book out to the fields so that he could read while his horse was resting, and often she would find him cowering out, with his turkey toes and pin and a better root ink, some favorite poem to remember. "A boy like him deserves to have his chance," she would say to herself. Ariadne Gillbert in St. Nicholas.

A Bismarck Duel.

A duel in which Bismarck was once engaged had a very amusing origin. It occurred when he was chief secretary of the Prussian legation at Frankfurt. He went much into society and one Christmas attended a big ball. During the height of the festivities Bismarck's attention was directed to an exceedingly pompous individual, who strutted about the room. This was M. de Clancy, a noted French duelist. Later on this important individual took part in the dance, but having omitted to leave his hat at the proper place had perforce to hold it out at arm's length while he danced. The spectacle tickled Bismarck immensely, and, as the Frenchman came sailing majestically along, Bismarck stepped forward and dropped a coin into the hat. A duel was one of the next day's events. Though it was with pistols Bismarck escaped unhurt, while his adversary was wounded.

Positive Proof.

A New York lawyer said in Washington of a certain exposure: "The proof was positive—as positive as the proof against the barber." "There was a barber who was accused of secret embezzlement, but his old patrons refused to credit such a charge. A stanch old patron went to the man to be shaved one morning. The barber in silence began to lather him, and then suddenly seized him by the nose. "Lathering away, the barber gripped the nose so firmly that its owner grunted in pain. "Here, let go my nose!" "But the barber, still holding on tight, said as he lathered steadily on: "'Can't! If I did I'd fall down.'" Washington Star.

He Adored Whitaker.

Whitaker, of immense fame, would seem to have been a better known name than that of the poet John Greenleaf Whitier. The poet was once persecuted by a man who followed him to his rural retreat, declaring that he adored his works and wanted his autograph. He exhibited overwhelming enthusiasm and "Yet all the time," said Whitier, "he called me Whitaker."—London Standard.

Home Work.

"Willie, why couldn't you find the result of these examples you took home?" inquired the teacher in a sharp voice. "Please, ma'am," replied the shaking boy, "my father says they was too hard for him, an' would you mind giving me a few easier ones to do?"—Woman's Home Companion.

An Ugly Weapon.

When boxers and fighters came together in the old days of Greece they wore upon their hands the cestus, which was in itself a terrible adjunct to any fighter. But there was sometimes attached to the cestus a deadlier weapon, consisting of a three pronged fork of bronze, known as the myrmex. Classical literature has frequent references to the myrmex, which is described as the deadliest weapon of the ancient pugilist. The right hand was swathed in tough hide, bound in place with thongs and supplemented by small knobs of lead or iron. This was the cestus, to which was affixed the myrmex. Combats in those days were much more brutal and dangerous than those of the modern prize ring. It is easily seen that a single blow of the myrmex might cause death or permanent injury.
